JAGGERS

From Mr. Behnken...

From Transition to Routine. The beginning of every school year (or any new experience) has several stages.

1. The first day.
2. The initial period (first couple weeks) / Building of habits and structures
3. Falling into routine
4. A new normal / routine

Let me encourage you, students and parents: now (during our 'initial period') is the best time to place emphasis on some intentional practices or disciplines that will make the coming season BETTER than the last.

I'm specifically referring to building in spiritual and academic practices.

First, the spiritual. If as a student or a parent, you allowed the busyness of the previous season to squeeze out time for communion with God, feeding on His word and corporate worship—what will you do to place the proper emphasis on these needed disciplines in your life during this season? Did you grasp the distance you placed between you and our Creator? Did you wonder why you had allowed this to happen? These are all questions to consider as you are still building your 'routine' for the coming season.

Second, the academic. Did you fall into a cycle of procrastination, catch-up, feeling behind? One of the most effective ways to improve as a student is to develop a way to organize your student experience. While we are all different, how successful you are at "executive functioning" will GREATLY impact both your learning and your success as a student. Commit to finding a "better" way than you have used before or to practicing an already successful method each and every day. Doing so will help you have confidence in what you are facing and set you up for academic success.

Have a great week, CAL!
