From Mr. Behnken...

Making the most of School Breaks

Fall break gives us a meaningful chance to pause from the pace of school, enjoy one another, and intentionally make memories that will last long after the break is over.

It is so difficult to not be inundated with the day-to-day and the tyranny of the urgent. But with intentionality and creativity, we can try to create 'all-family' experiences that could become lasting memories. Seeing and being in nature is one constant winner with our kids—that and sports in general. So we've planned part of fall break based on a desire to enjoy some of those things together—but also are blocking some time for organic fun, doing some things that we enjoy, and resting. I doubt you would regret placing some intentionality on this time.

It is also a good time to reflect. The fall break marks the $\frac{1}{4}$ point of the school year. Your freshman student who was nervously awaiting day 1, is now an 'old' pro at high school and how things work here. Transitioning to high school seemed so daunting, yet here we are (less than) 2 months later, and they are navigating it with ease.

The fall break also points to a change in seasons—and to "gentler" weather. As you navigate and lead your kids through the change, take time to reflect on God's faithfulness to you during this past season. This is in obedience to the command of parents to testify about God's faithfulness to their children. Help your young people to mine their experiences, looking for examples of God's faithfulness to them in this season. In fact, it also makes for a good time not just to reflect, but to discuss vision and goals/hopes for the next season. Helping your students set some goals (academic and otherwise) for the "fall season" can help get them focused on a specific outcome they would like to accomplish.

In conclusion: fall break has lots of possibilities. I hope you are able to maximize those opportunities to make some sweet family memories and great experiences together. May the Lord bless you parents as you help shepherd and guide your students into this next season.
